

The US hotel and motel industry consists of about 40,000 companies that operate roughly 50,000 properties, with combined annual revenues of an estimated $120 billion. The industry relies heavily on a healthy economy because operating profits drop off precipitously during a downturn due to high fixed costs. Despite recent economic conditions, the average daily rate (ADR), a key metric for the industry, is expected to increase by 4.1 percent by the end of 2011, according to PricewaterhouseCoopers. PwC forecasts increasing demand that will boost the average occupancy rate to more than 58 percent and projects that revenue per available room (RevPAR) will grow by 6.7 percent. This forecast takes into account tightened room supply caused by the drop in new hotel and motel construction starts during the late 2000s.
