

Perpessi, Pernikki, and Pumm are a family of elephants that live on the African savanna circa 1760. Perpessi is a willful and headstrong character who knows that she is destined for great things. But where she lives on the African savanna, there are no opportunities for an elephant with her talents. She and her family must pick up and go to a place where she will be appreciated for what she is – namely, an elephant with something to say, an elephant that will make her mark. And so they leave the savanna and head out – across the desert and across the sea. For awhile they work as field hands on a Georgia plantation. But Mr. Willows Big Farm is not the venue for her talents that Perpessi had envisioned. And she will tolerate neither Mr. Willows arrogance nor his bossmans bluster. While Perpessis long-suffering and loyal husband Pumm and her inquisitive young daughter Pernikki try to cope with life at Mr. Willows Big Farm, Perpessi conspires with Miss Tooty to escape to the Free North – to Philadelphia and the life she knows is waiting there for her. Because Perpessi had never doubted that, somewhere, they had a place at the table and were expected. Getting there, though, turns out to be a struggle.
